

MORNING APPEAL.

THURSDAY.....AUGUST 3, 1882

President Arthur returned the River and Harbor Appropriation bill to the House without his approval. Press dispatches of yesterday inform us that both Senate and House have passed the measure over the Presidential veto. While some of the appropriations asked for were just and in accord with public policy, others partook too much of a local character, and to this latter class the President very justly based his veto of the bill. He holds it to be unconstitutional to appropriate money from the treasury, obtained by taxing the whole country, where the benefit is only to accrue to a local point. He also recites the increase in appropriations during the past ten years from $3,995,900 to $18,745,875, and takes occasion to point a moral to members of Congress in general for their concert of action in mutually advocating the disbursing of public moneys for the particular locality of each, as he expresses it, "Thus, as the bill becomes more objectionable, it secures more support." These few words in the message contain a great deal of meaning, and evince the fact very plainly that President Arthur not only means business, but also talks it.

Judge Wylie, who is conducting the star-route trial, has a high sense of the dignity of the Court, and will brook no breach of decorum. But his strict discipline was forced to yield a little the other day—one of those blistering hot days that parboiled all Washington in its own perspiration. A sturdy Omaha granger appeared in the box as a witness, in his shirt sleeves. Bending his brows into a severe judicial frown, Judge Wylie demanded: "Sir, do you think that the weather is uncommonly warm?" "Ya-as, sir," responded the prince of the prairie, perfectly unabashed, "it is purty warm;" and the Judge relapsed into indignant and disgusted silence.

Two pilgrims from the Holy Land applied for lodgings at a Chicago police station last Sunday evening. Each wore short trousers and upon his head an Arab fez. The elder of the two, a man of venerable appearance, said in broken English that they were from Jerusalem, and that they were on their way to see Archbishop Feehan. They understood very little English, but when the name Mahomet was spoken they crossed themselves and exclaimed in unison, "He had man." They then refused to talk further.

Each person in this community imagines that some few of his or her friends are oddities. In fact the expression, "The world is full of odd people," is very common. This is true, but the very individuality that makes a man necessary to the great system of humanity, also renders him odd too his neighbors. Therefore, one should not be so ready to mock and sneer about the oddities of others when all are so queer and peculiar themselves.

Some fanatics are tearing the air with loud vociferation that there is no "God in the Constitution." An honest manhood, founded on true principles of integrity, with honor mercy and love in our life, thoughts and acts, is what will make and keep us a great and prosperous nation, no matter what is omitted from the Constitution.

There is great joy at the re-establishment of the drum in the French army. In the barracks the canteen soldiers are preparing to welcome it back with festivity. The army, it was found, was losing prestige in the eyes of the people for want of the drum.

The Germans are fast coming to realize the advantage of having type like the rest of the modern world. Fully 40 per cent. of the books printed in that country in 1880 were in the "antique" or Latin type.

Some of our recent novels remind us of a comet, for both are a long tail from a small head.

For a first-class shave, hair-cut or shampoo, by a first-class artist, the place to go is M. Ascheim's, adjoining the Carson Exchange. He has fitted up a shop in good style, keeps his tools in fine condition, and wants his old friends and the public in general to know that he can be found next door to the Carson Exchange, near the depot. No trouble to wait on customers.

The highest medical authority is pronounced in denouncing the use of ice made from other than pure running water. The old theory that freezing purified water in stagnant ponds and destroyed impurities, has been exploded, and it is now a settled fact that no ice is fit for use but that frozen in running streams. Doc Benton has an abundance on hand, cut from the Carson river, and delivers the same to all parts of the city. Orders left at the livery stable will receive prompt attention.
